Best Answer: Having graduated from law school a few years ago, I think it's most important that you go to school in the state in which you plan to practice. You may get to know local attorneys through your school's career services department or clinical practicums, and that will help you in your job search down the road.

Law School? | Yahoo Answers

Best Answer: No. You don't have to be a pre-law major to go to law school. All you need to do is get a Bachelor's (4 year Undergraduate Degree), take the LSAT (Law School Admissions Test) and apply to law schools. That's it. (Sounds easier than it is, but really this is all that is required).

Best Answer: Law school and graduate school will cost about the same amount per year, since you probably can't expect to get a teaching assistantship in philosophy (while it's very common in the sciences and engineering). However, grad school will take longer than law school (5-7 years rather than 3 on ...

Law School or Graduate School? | Yahoo Answers

Yahoo Singapore Answers ... My undergrad is in business, and then I went to law school. That was an excellent combination for my career. Do not major in pre-law for your undergrad. If you decide to work for a couple years prior to law school or do not enjoy law enough to go to school for that many years, you will essentially have a useless degree.

Can i get into law school if I did not attend a GREAT undergrad college. I am still in college and I will graduate soon but I am afraid I wont get in law school because i am not attending a really known college. I have a 3.5 gpa and i attend University of Phoenix which is a accredited college but will the law schools hold that against me being its not a fancy undergrad school?

Law School/Help?!?!????/? | Yahoo Answers

I'm finishing up my junior year this month as an undergrad. For the duration of the summer I am interning at my local public defender's office, and I'll be taking Kaplan prep for the LSAT (which I'm signed up to take in the Fall). I'm confident that my work experience and references are developed for my age. I'm a little concerned about my transcripts though.

Is Harvard only a law school? | Yahoo Answers

Hey everyone. I am in my first year of a Bachelors program and I have a question about law school. I am looking to go to law school in the future, however, I am not quite sure how it works. Do law schools look at my grades throughout the whole four years or are they only interested in my third and fourth year marks? I don't know if this makes a difference but I want to attend law school in Canada.

Best Answer: Don't know which school that you want to go to....but I can tell you that my first year was like basic training in the army. I didn't spend that many hours in class but the study and reading load was huge. I would spend about five hours on campus and in classes and then study from the time I got home until it was time to go to bed (maybe small breaks for meals).
