An optical fiber is a flexible, transparent fiber made by drawing glass or plastic to a diameter slightly thicker than that of a human hair. Optical fibers are used most often as a means to transmit light between the two ends of the fiber and find wide usage in fiber-optic communications, where they permit transmission over longer distances and at higher bandwidths (data rates) than electrical ...

Excellent review! I picked one of these up this past spring. I initially had the PST II 3-15 and wasn't quite pleased with the optical quality (my background is in LPVO like the K16i, Razor G2, VX-6HD, for reference).

As of the date on this page, only specular glazing materials, however complex they may be in physical structure, are passed through the review process. This could be monolithic glass, plastic, laminates, applied films on glass, or thin-film coated glass. Diffusing or light redirecting glazing or shading devices are not allowed at present.

Texture (71) and Noise (64) The Pixel 3 represents a substantial improvement in noise reduction over the Pixel 2, with its score jumping from 59 to 64. This comes in exchange for a slight decrease in the amount of detail captured, with the Texture score going from 73 to 71. The tradeoff is a generally good one, resulting in better quality images, especially in low light and in indoor settings.

where W is the wedge angle, often reported as arcminutes, and n is the index of refraction..
Parallelism. Parallelism describes how parallel two surfaces are with respect to each other. It is useful in specifying components such as windows and polarizers where parallel surfaces are ideal for system performance because they minimize distortion that can otherwise degrade image or light quality.

If a binocular is to be used predominantly hand held under the night sky, then 10x50 appears to be a good compromise: The 10x magnification is still manageable without excessive jitter, and 50mm objectives gather quite a significant amount of light.
