Logical fallacies can often be somewhat logical and very convincing, but they are fallacies because they are not truly perfectly logical. Like with ad hominem argument it would be a fallacy to shake off the argument of a compulsive liar because he is one, even though what he is saying is probably false.

Concerning logical fallacies? | Yahoo Answers

The phrase ad hominem is Latin and means "to the man." The fallacy is so named because it directs an argument against the person making a claim rather than the claim itself. The critic hopes that people will believe the claim in question is false simply on the basis that there is something objectionable about the person making the claim.
