Our motivation. Oceans cover over 70% of the earth's surface, yet 95% of its seafloors are unknown. Unlike studies of the earth's atmosphere and land surfaces using e.g. satellite imaging, changes to our seafloors remain largely undocumented, and even if some data is available, this is often of very low quality.

You may be able to find out how to stop breakouts by doing some detective work and face mapping. Argh, those nasty breakouts. You scrub and you wash and you tone and you moisturize, and still they show up just when you least need them, like right before a big interview, presentation, or meeting with your new in-laws.

The microplastics sampling region and methods from the sea surface microlayer (SML) have been published elsewhere (Song et al., 2014) in detail. Water samples were collected near- and offshore of Geoje Island, which receives riverine discharge from the nearby Nakdong River, South Korea (SML). The SML water samples were collected at 10 stations in May and July, 2012 (Song et al., 2014).
